

Greetings,

We have officially entered the Fall 2019 semester, ready to go and looking forward to a great academic year! Our MLIS and Informatics programs are enrolled to the maximum, and we continue to grow our Master of Science in Information Management (MSIM) as well. Believe it or not, it has been three years since the Fall 2016 launch of the Informatics and MSIM programs; this begins our fourth year of expanded course offerings. Developing curriculum in these emerging areas of the LIS profession has added richness to our school and our student body. As with all of our School of Information Studies endeavors, our faculty members deserve extensive credit for the programs' excellence and success.

In the midst of our forays into new areas of the LIS field, we also continue to feature our core library and archives programs. For example, our September 19, 2019 McCusker Lecture will feature the award-winning public librarian Skye Patrick from Los Angeles Public Library; the Eighth Annual Butler Lecture on March 4, 2020 will feature children's book author and illustrator Bryan Collier; and, our 2019-2020 Follett Chair and April 20, 2020 lecturer is Bernie Reilly, president emeritus of the Center for Research Libraries, who will focus his work as Follett Chair on the politics and economics of digital evidence and the future of memory institutions in civil society. Find more information in this newsletter about Skye Patrick and Bernie Reilly, and look for more information on Bryan Collier's March 4 lecture in the Winter Off the Shelf. I hope you can join us for one or all of these upcoming special events!

SOIS New Strategic Plan

After a year of stakeholder interviews and data collection, SOIS has finalized our 2019-2023 Strategic Plan. We have identified four Strategic Priorities:

- Build Strength and Advance the Programs of the School
- Increase the Visibility and Recognition of the School
- Foster the School's Learning Community
- Build Intercultural Competence and Global Citizenship

Many thanks to the various groups and individuals who contributed to the discussions toward our new 2019-2023 Plan, which will take us through our next accreditation cycle. We are already working on many of the initiatives we identified within each of our Strategic Priorities!

This year, the forum was funded by an LSTA grant from the Illinois State Library. Featured speakers at the forum included John Elder Robison, Chantal Sicile-Kira, Dilshad Ali, Tom Iland and many more self and librarian advocates. ## ALUMNA FOCUS

Gabrielle (Abby) Annala | MBA, MLIS

UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES – LOYOLA UNIVERSITY CHICAGO

Assessment Librarian | Business Research Specialist

Where are you currently working, and how did you find that particular job

Presently, I work at Loyola University Chicago. I spent most of my career as a student at Dominican focusing on library marketing and management, and decided while I was working on my MLIS that I also wanted to pursue my MBA. I initially took a job as a marketing coordinator for a local public library, but after a year of working there, I decided to pursue work at an academic library so I could have the opportunity to go back to graduate school. I am also an alum of Loyola, so returning to my Alma Mater was a dream come true. I started off as the subject specialist for the School of Business and the School of Communication – but in December I was offered the role of Assessment Librarian. I still work with Loyola’s school of business as well.

Talk a little about the job – what do you do, and what do you enjoy about it?

My role has two major components – but like every librarian, there are about a thousand little things on the side that I also do. As the assessment librarian, I’m getting an in-depth look at strategic initiatives, planning, and cross-departmental initiatives. As the business librarian, I work on our collection, instruction, and research consultation with students. I LOVE working with business students – especially at Loyola. They’re always trying to solve the world’s problems and it’s inspiring to be around. In addition to my roles at Loyola, I serve on a variety of professional development groups and I’m also an adjunct instructor at both Loyola University Chicago (Graduate School of Communication) and Dominican (School of Information Studies).

How does your current position align or compare with what you studied when you were in the MLIS program?

I took a lot of classes in my MLIS program that still directly impact my job. Collection development, library instruction, and management were all fundamental in my education and in my current role. I also did an independent study in library marketing, and a practicum in academic/special library marketing & health sciences librarianship – so I got firsthand experience working with patrons and contributing towards library-wide goals. I think the best part of my MLIS education was that it prepared me to solve new problems as I encounter them; it’s not possible to take a course in every single discipline, but learning to think creatively, explore new opportunities, and confront challenges will take you very far in any career path.

Are there any new or upcoming trends in the library and information field or in archives that you find particularly interesting right now? What is exciting you the most about working in libraries today?

I’m excited to see an increased emphasis on design thinking, strategic planning, and more conventional marketing initiatives. Librarians have been talking about “outreach” and “engagement” for decades – but it’s always been hard to quantify and report out on how that’s impacting our communities because of the abstract nature of those terms. Design thinking is getting us out of our comfort zones, and emphasizing new products and services on the unique needs of our community’s patrons, rather than focusing on what other libraries are doing. A good strategic plan will help give our libraries a direction, so we know how best to serve our communities. Despite being managerial terms, these concepts based on empathy and service for our communities – I feel like the managerial world and the library world are beginning to co-exist more cohesively than they have in the past.

What advice do you have for current SOIS students in terms of their preparation for the job market?

Every single thing you've done in your life has value. Think about personal experiences, your professional past, your education, your values, your hobbies or interests, etc.; spend a lot of time learning to articulate what type of asset you'd be to an employer based on your "whole self", not just your degree. Also, take advantage of as many opportunities as possible. Join clubs, professional development groups, do a practicum or an internship, etc. as frequently as possible. Even if you're juggling work, family, and school – some of these opportunities are limited to current students so take advantage of them while you can. It's a safe space to explore a variety of interests before committing to a single career path. That being said – don't be afraid to change your professional goals as you have new experiences! We're constantly changing – and a variety of careers exist to represent our evolving interests.
